ORDER DENYING REPSONDENT'S MOTION TO STRIKE PORTIONS OF ENFORCEMENT'S POST-HEARING APPENDIX

A. Background

Following the hearing, I ordered each party to file initial and reply post-hearing briefs containing proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law.<sup>1</sup> Among other things, the Order contained limitations on the length of the briefs: 35 pages for initial briefs, 15 pages for reply briefs. Additionally, it directed the parties to attach to their initial briefs an appendix containing a chronology describing: (1) any purported red flags indicative of potentially suspicious activity which Respondent detected or reasonably should have detected; and (2) the response, if any, Respondent made, or reasonably should have made, to the purported red flags. The Order also required the parties to support all proposed findings of fact or other factual statements in the briefs and chronologies by specific references to the record. Finally, the chronologies were not subject to, and did not count toward, any page limitations.

On April 30, 2015, the Department of Enforcement filed its initial brief. The brief was 35 pages in length. Enforcement attached to the brief a 38-page appendix. On May 20, 2015, Respondent moved to strike portions of the appendix, claiming that Enforcement improperly used it as a vehicle to avoid the briefing limitations. Specifically, Respondent asserts that Enforcement inserted proposed findings of fact, conclusions of law, and legal argument solely in the appendix "and not in its opening brief, where it belonged." Respondent requests that I strike these portions of the appendix because, otherwise, Enforcement will reap an unfair advantage.

On May 26, 2015, Enforcement opposed the motion to strike, arguing that it complied with the Order.<sup>2</sup> Enforcement disputes that it removed facts, information and legal argument from the brief. To the contrary, it asserts that it discussed red flags of potentially suspicious activity at length, and with specificity, in its brief, "categorizing the types of red flags and giving specific examples."

B. Discussion

Courts have found page limitations in pleadings to be important. Not only do they regulate the court's workload, but they also serve to "encourage litigants to hone their arguments and to eliminate excessive verbiage."<sup>3</sup> Additionally, in numerous cases, courts have rebuked parties for evading such limitations through computer-aided contrivances such as small or shrunken font, excessive use of lengthy footnotes (especially textual footnotes),<sup>4</sup> and similar maneuvers, whether or not expressly prohibited by local rules or court order.<sup>5</sup> These improper maneuvers have included transferring material to an appendix that properly belonged in the brief.<sup>6</sup>

The above principles governing adherence to page limitations apply equally in this forum. Therefore, I have considered them in ruling upon the instant motion to strike. Here, I find that Enforcement violated neither the letter nor the spirit of the Order.<sup>7</sup> The Order required the parties to address certain subjects in their appendices, which Enforcement did. The Order did not restrict the appendices to the facts or factual arguments contained in the briefs. Therefore, Enforcement did not violate the Order to the extent it addressed the specified subjects by going beyond what it included in its brief.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Enforcement also argued that I should deny the motion to strike because Respondent violated the Case Management and Scheduling Order by failing to consult with Enforcement before filing the motion. See Case Management and Scheduling Order (June 20, 2014) at 3–4. Enforcement further notes that denying the motion on this basis alone is appropriate because this is not the first time that Respondent has failed to comply with this provision and that I previously warned Respondent that failing to consult with Enforcement prior to filing a motion may result in its summary denial. See Order Denying Respondent's Motion to Quash (Oct. 16, 2014) at 4 n.11.

Second, Enforcement did not utilize the appendix improperly to avoid the page limitations applicable to the briefs. The Order did not prohibit the parties from citing to the appendices, and, therefore, the parties were entitled to do so. Further, the page limitations pertaining to the briefs are to be read in conjunction with the page limitation exemption granted to appendices. Thus, Enforcement did not circumvent the page limitations applicable to the briefs by referencing an authorized appendix that was exempt from those limitations.

Based on the foregoing, I DENY Respondent's motion to strike.<sup>8</sup>

SO ORDERED.

Andrew H. Perkins<sup>9</sup> Chief Hearing Officer

Dated: June 4, 2015
